Feel good and work better

Whether you're working from home or in an office, long hours at a desk can take a toll – especially if your setup isn't right for your body. Poor ergonomics can lead to discomfort, injuries and even affect your mental well-being. An ergonomic workspace, tailored to your needs, supports better health, comfort and focus. By allowing you to sit, stand and move throughout the day, it helps you feel better – and work better too.

Enable switching between standing and sitting

Switching between standing and sitting helps reduce strain on your lower back, neck, and shoulders. This active way of working supports better circulation, posture, focus and overall well-being.

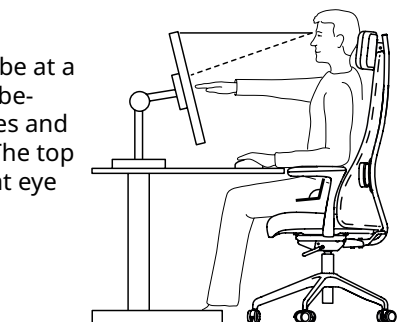

- 1. The top of your monitor should be at eye level.
- 2. A height-adjustable desk lets you change position often. It's generally recommended to stand for 15–30 minutes each hour. Most of our electric sit/stand desks feature 2 memory settings for easy height adjustment.
- 3. Most of our sit/stand desks adjust up to 126 cm, accommodating users up to 192–195 cm tall.
- 4. Whether sitting or standing, your work surface should be elbow height, with elbows at a 90–110° angle.

Ensure an ergonomic chair

An ergonomic office chair supports the spine's natural curve, promoting good posture and reducing strain on the back, neck and shoulders. Look for lumbar support, adjustable height and seat depth to maintain alignment and prevent discomfort or injury during long sitting hours. A synchronised tilt adds the benefit of improved circulation and energy.

When sitting, knees should be at a 90° angle, with a small gap between the back of your knees and the edge of the chair seat. The top of your monitor should be at eye level.

Position your monitor correctly

Position your monitor so you can't touch the screen with fully extended arms. For desk monitors, an 80 cm desk depth is ideal; 60 cm works for laptops. Centre the screen with the top just below eye level. A monitor stand helps set the right height, reducing neck strain and improving your posture.

Improve the acoustic environment

Acoustic screens absorb sounds like laughter, ringtones and typing, helping create a quieter, more focused workspace. They enhance privacy, reduce interruptions and boost productivity. Curtains, rugs and other textiles also aid sound absorption. Learn more about improving your acoustic environment on pages 32-35.

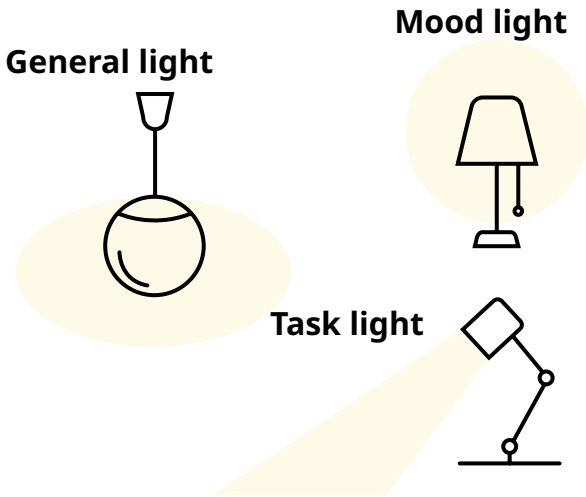

Hide messy cables

Cable management creates a clean and organised workspace, reducing visual clutter and promoting a sense of calm. It gives easier access to devices and prevents tripping hazards. MITTZON cable management tray adds convenience and prevents strains from bending and reaching for outlets under the desk.

Combine different types of lighting

Proper lighting reduces eye strain, boosts focus, and creates a comfortable atmosphere. A mix of lighting types works best.

General lighting, often from ceiling lamps, provides uniform light throughout the room helping to create a good overview. Daylight also helps but may cause screen glare – position your desk so light comes from the side, and use blinds or curtains to control it.

Task lighting targets specific areas for work. Adjustable desk or floor lamps are ideal for flexible, focused light.

Mood lighting softens contrasts to create a cosy feel. Use table lamps on shelves or in windows, and floor lamps for dark corners. It makes your workplace more inviting and relaxing with minimal effort.

Ensure ease of maintenance

A dynamic workplace shifts throughout the day as furniture is moved around for meetings and collaboration. Lightweight furniture on wheels reduces strain and supports seamless teamwork.

Relieve pressure on knees and feet

DAGOTTO footrest promotes a healthy sitting posture and reduces strain on your legs, back and neck. For long periods of standing, try FREIVID standing mat to relieve pressure on your feet, knees and back. Find out more about our ergonomic accessories on pages 30–31.

Invite elements of nature into your workspace

Nature has a positive effect on us, whether it's a bike ride in the park or a walk by the beach. But what if we could bring that feeling indoors? Biophilic design connects our indoor spaces with nature, using natural light, ventilation and materials to reduce stress while boosting well-being and performance.

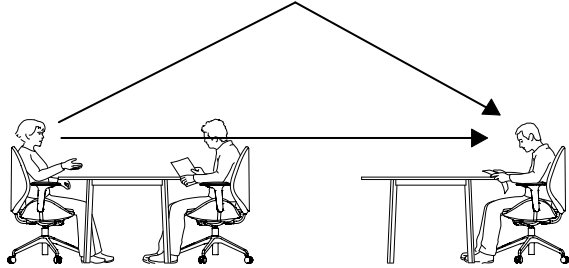

Soft nature-inspired colours create calm and focus, while tactile materials like wood add warmth. Organic shapes and greenery, such as plants used as room dividers, bring the outdoors in, making us feel more relaxed and connected to nature.

Acoustics matters

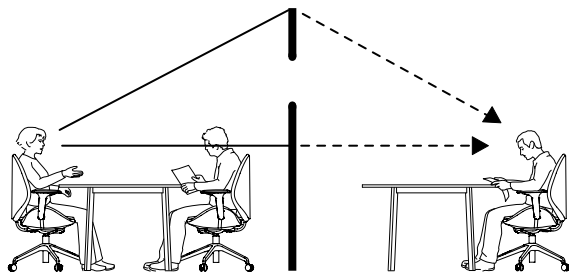

Many modern offices have open floor plans, which can lead to noise and distractions that affect focus – like ringing phones, chatter and typing sounds. But there are solutions! An important part of creating a thriving workplace is finding ways to reduce noise and ensure privacy. Our acoustic products are designed with your well-being in mind, enhancing both comfort and productivity.

No acoustic treatment

When there is nothing to block or absorb the sound, the sound waves bounce around the room making the acoustic environment disharmonious for everyone in the surroundings.

With acoustic treatment

The less the sound bounces around, the shorter the reverberation time, which leads to better acoustics and speech intelligibility.

What is room acoustics?

Room acoustics refer to how sound travels and behaves within a space. Without elements to absorb sound or prevent sound waves from bouncing around, the acoustic environment can feel disharmonious.

Reverberation time is the period it takes for sound to fade, influenced by the size of the room and the materials that absorb sound. With simple measures, we can improve room acoustics and reverberation time, creating quieter spaces that are better for working and collaborating.

Work with sound absorption

Non-porous materials like glass, MDF or concrete reflect sound, creating echoes, while porous materials such as curtains, soft seat covers and rugs absorb sound. Acoustic products like desk and floor-standing screens also absorb sound, helping to balance the effects of non-porous materials.

Place furniture strategically

Voices, ringtones and footsteps can be softened with acoustic screens, room dividers with plants or book-filled shelves. Place printers and coffee machines in separate rooms. Use felt pads on chair feet, sound-absorbing floors for castors and drawer dampers to further reduce noise.

Block the sound

Divide the space into separate acoustic zones using barriers that limit sound travel across open areas and between workstations. MITTZON desk and floor-standing acoustic screens are ideal for this purpose. Designed with a low-density fibreboard core, surrounded by a thick, wood fibre filling they deliver excellent sound-absorbing and sound – blocking performance.

Privacy is important

MITTZON focus workstation offers a comfy space ideal for concentration in lounges, lobbies and receptions areas. Designed for short periods of focused work, it's perfect for checking emails or completing tasks, with recommended use of up to two hours.

The magic starts on the inside

MITTZON desk and floor standing acoustic screens feature a low-density fibreboard core surrounded by thick wood fibre filling for excellent acoustic performance. The filling is made from 92% renewable, recyclable wood fibre, sourced from debarked, chopped trees. The fibres are steamed, milled, bonded into sheets, and cut into chips, no larger than postage stamps. Any excess material is re-used, ensuring no waste.

The screens are 80 mm thick and covered in a durable and machine-washable fabric.

Acoustic products help create a balanced sound environment

MITTZON acoustic screens on lockable castors create flexible, sound-absorbing collaboration areas. Notes can be pinned to the fabric cover, and when the meeting ends, the screens roll away easily and store compactly.

All our acoustic products have been developed and tested together with acoustic specialists to ensure they meet sound-absorbing and sound-blocking requirements.

MITTZON floor-standing screens are ideal for creating adaptable work zones in flexible office spaces. Connect two or more using the rounded wooden rods on the sides. The fabric's wave-like pattern, inspired by sand ripples, is enhanced by stitched detailing for added depth.

Flexibility in the workplace

Change is a natural part of any workplace – whether it’s new routines, hybrid work or reorganisation. To support well-being and meet evolving needs, the work environment should be flexible enough to adapt, both short-term and long-term.

Day-to-day flexibility

In a busy workplace, furniture often needs to move – whether it’s pulling up a chair for a quick chat or adding tables to a meeting room. For daily flexibility, it is good to have furniture with castors that is easy to move, and just as easy to move back, fold and stack as needed. Other multi-functional products like MITTZON frames with castors can double as green walls or whiteboards, while MITTZON laptop table lets you work where you want and switch easily between sitting and standing.

Flexibility on demand

Sometimes, short-term needs arise – like creating a space for a project or team collaboration without disturbing others. MITTZON, TROTTEEN and IDÅSEN furniture series can easily be combined and rearranged for solo or group work, all while keeping a cohesive look across the office.

TROTTEEN modular office system adapts seamlessly for individuals or teams. Watch our short film to see how it transforms to meet your unique needs.

Flexibility over many years

How you furnish your office today might not suit tomorrow. Long-term flexibility starts with smart choices – quality furniture that can be scaled, reshuffled or reconfigured as needs change, while keeping a cohesive look. Choosing durable, tested pieces from a coordinated series makes it easy to adapt without starting over.

Explore how our MITTZON, TROTTEEN and IDÅSEN series combine flexibility, quality and ergonomic comfort to create a sustainable, long-lasting office that supports well-being for years to come.

Room dividers and acoustic screens

Dividing your office space can be easy and flexible. Whether it's creating privacy, forming collaboration areas or setting up a cosy lounge for coffee breaks, screens and dividers are a cost-effective way to make the space work for everyone.

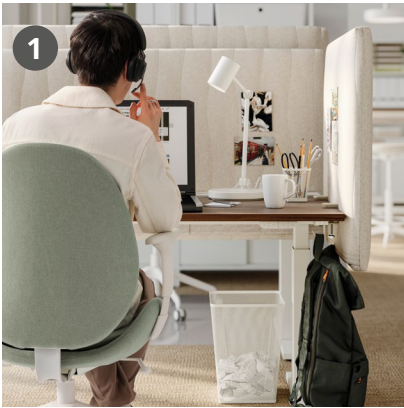

MITZON frames with castors offer a versatile system for dividing work areas or creating a room within a room. Customise the frame with your choice of acoustic screen, whiteboard/noticeboard, shelves, containers for plants, cable box or clothes rails.

1. MITZON acoustic screens for desks

The desk-mounted screens are ideal for creating privacy around the desk and can effectively reduce the buzz from the surrounding environment.

2. MITZON floor-standing acoustic screens

The floor-standing screens help to divide space and reduce noise levels. They can be adapted to the specific size and needs of your space.

Tips for good acoustics

Work with sound absorption Use desk and floor-standing acoustic screens with thick, fabric-covered filling – they are great for absorbing sound. Textiles such as rugs and curtains are good for this purpose too.

Block the sound Divide space using desk and floor-standing acoustic screens. The hard MDF core in the screens blocks sound and prevents it from travelling between workstations, creating acoustic zones without changing the room's architecture.

Place furniture strategically Place acoustic screens, plant-filled room dividers, and bookshelves strategically to help diffuse sound between different areas of the office. Rugs under chairs and felt pads on chair legs also reduce sound. Use drawer dampers to prevent slamming, and keep noisy items like printers and coffee machines in separate rooms.

Removable and washable cover. MITZON acoustic screens have a thick, durable fabric cover that efficiently absorbs sound and is removable for machine washing.

It is easy to mount the screens. Attach side screens for desks with the included clamps. Back-mounted screens use L-brackets, and floor-standing screens connect with wooden rods and plastic clips. See assembly instructions for details.

Suitable for business use.

Choosing the right storage

When choosing office storage, consider size, function and the items you need to store. When the style matches your décor, it all comes together as a reflection of your company's identity.

1. What's your style? A well-coordinated workspace brings a sense of calm. Our TROTTE, IDÅSEN, and GALANT series offer a variety of stylish storage solutions to suit any space.
2. Open or closed storage? Open storage provides easy access to frequently used items and allows you to display them. It usually comes with adjustable shelves and can be customised with doors or drawers. Closed storage helps hide clutter for a tidier, more uniform appearance.
3. Organised and secure. Filing cabinets keep documents organised and reduce clutter. Look for features like drawer stops to prevent over-extension and integrated dampers for quiet, soft closing. For sensitive documents, choose options with built-in locks.
4. Work from home like a pro. When your home doubles as a workspace, choose flexible, versatile storage that fits your space and can be easily moved or rearranged.

Different types of lighting for your workspace

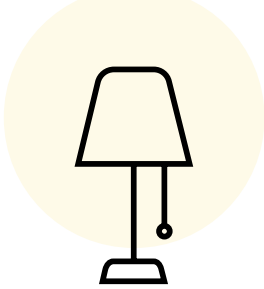

When lighting your workspace, it's important to understand how different lamps distribute light and how to combine them to meet office needs. Effective lighting includes task, general, and natural light without glare or reflections, plus mood lighting to soften contrasts.

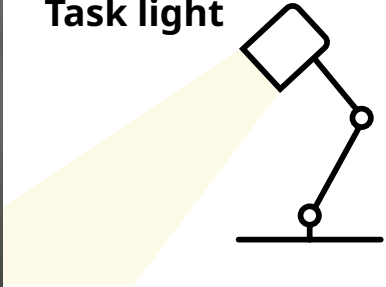

General light

Task light

Combine different types of lighting

Proper lighting reduces eye strain, boosts focus, and creates a comfortable atmosphere. A mix of lighting types works best.

General lighting, often from ceiling lamps, provides uniform light throughout the room helping to create a good overview. Daylight also helps but may cause screen glare – position your desk so light comes from the side, and use blinds or curtains to control it.

Task lighting targets specific areas for work. Adjustable desk or floor lamps are ideal for flexible, focused light.

Mood lighting softens contrasts to create a cosy feel. Use table lamps on shelves or in windows, and floor lamps for dark corners. It makes your workplace more inviting and relaxing with minimal effort.

Ceiling lamps

Our range of spotlights, flush ceiling lamps and pendants provide good general light and add an element of style. Whether you want an industrial feel, a natural touch or a retro vibe, we have a ceiling lamp for your workspace.
